

Sometime before 523, north of the DURANCE near ~~THE~~ ARLES and thus close to where that river flows into the Rhone, Liborius fell into a Visigothic ambush, apparently in a time of peace. Visigothic warriors had probably invaded the Sallic prefecture via Burgundian territory, for until 523 the Durance formed the Ostrogothic border with the Burgundians. Only after 523 did Theodoric annex that region, at least

up to the dream, then the strange incident in which Theodoric's praetorian prefect of Gaul was attacked by Vengoth's warriors, of whom Theodoric was king, must have taken place between 512 & 513

Fall
523 + 1 yr

From Fall 523 BOETHIUS spent more than 1 yr in jail in PAVIA where he composed his famous work "The Consolation of Philosophy"

Between 523 & 526

therefore had a letter written - probably for the king of the "Thuringian" VSAVI - in which he expressed his appreciation for the valuable gifts, among them DAMASCENED swords of excellent quality.
